INTRODUCTION.

"A Fine (Finis, or Finalis Concordia), so called from the words with which it begins, and also from its effect in putting a final end to all suits and contentions, was an amicable agreement or composition of a suit, whether real or fictitious, made between the parties with the consent of the judges, and enrolled among the records of the Court in which the suit was commenced....Fines no doubt originated in actual suits for recovering the possession of lands and other hereditaments, the possession thus gained being found so sure and effectual that fictitious actions were soon introduced for the sake of obtaining the same security."¹

Many lawyers and antiquaries have treated learnedly on this subject, from Glanvill and Bracton down to Professors Pollock and Maitland in their "History of English Law before Edward I." Coke and Blackstone alleged that Fines were in existence "before the Norman Conquest," but Cruise and Hunter gave reasons for doubting whether they could have been in use before 1130. The earliest Fine now preserved in the Public Record Office is dated 1st December, 1182, and this happens to relate partly to Essex. Mr. Round has discovered, in cartularies and other manuscripts, copies of a dozen or more Fines of earlier dates,² but even these do not carry us back further than the latter part of Henry II.'s reign, i.e. 1175—1180. They may, however, have originated previously, for it was not till the 15th July, 1195, that the King's Court began systematically to preserve a triplicate of every Final Concord made before the Justices. This important fact is derived from an endorsement on a Fine, quoted in the "History of English Law." From that date three copies of each Fine were made upon one piece of parchment, which was then cut into three portions. One copy, called the "Chirograph" or "Foot" of the Fine, was retained among the records of the Court, and the other two copies, called "Indentures," were delivered to the respective parties.³ The upper margin of the "Foot" is indented, and in the indentations are visible portions of the word "Cirographum," written in large capital letters wide apart, while the other corresponding portions of the same word would appear partly on the left side of one Indenture, partly on that of the other; but very few early Indentures are extant. One of the Essex Fines is indented on two sides.

The most important effects of a Fine were:—1. the barring of any claim by a stranger, unless the claim were "put in" within a year and a day; 2. the barring of all claims by the issue-in-tail of the grantor immediately; 3. the binding of married women who were parties, so that they could claim no dower from the property thus settled.⁴

Although the Fines are mostly very brief and terse documents, written on small pieces of parchment, they contain sundry formal clauses, which are either abridged or omitted altogether in these abstracts, as will be explained in the following paragraphs.

Each Fine begins with the words, "This is the Final Concord," or "Agreement," as it is translated in modern Fines. Then it is stated that it was made in "the King's Court," usually held at Westminster "before" the King's Justices and others of the King's "Barons" or "faithful people" then and there present; but the word "Barons" fell into disuse at the beginning of John's reign. In early times the King's Court was frequently held elsewhere, and in numerous instances the Fine was "levied"¹ before the King's Justices in Eyre at the assizes; but the word "Itinerant" is not always expressed. Thus many of the Essex Fines were made at St. Bride's (in Fleet Street) London, the Old Temple, Bermondsey, Winchester, York, Stratford, Chelmsford, and other places.

When the Fine was levied at Westminster, the fact is not noticed here, nor are the names of the Justices given, as a rule; but when the King himself was present, or when archbishops, bishops, or other notable personages were sitting on the bench, notice is taken of the circumstance. It will be seen that one Fine was made in the Court of the Exchequer; others made in that Court have been noticed by Mr. Round. After the Court of Common Pleas was finally established, all Fines were made and recorded in that court alone.

With regard to the date of the Fine, which is either in the "octave," "quinzaine," "three weeks," "month," or "five weeks" of one of the four law-terms, or on a Saint's day, or on some week-day preceding or following a Saint's day, it would on the one hand take up too much space to give these dates in full, and on the other hand it would involve too much calculation—often doubtful²—to fix the precise day. Consequently, when the date given clearly occurred within one of the four terms, the name of that term only is indicated. When the Fine took place at the assizes, the precise day is given. In some cases Fines were levied on Sunday. It will be useful here to set out the limits of the respective law-terms.

Hilary term began 23rd or 24th January, and ended 12th or 13th February.

Easter term began some day between 8th April and 12th May, and ended some day between 4th May and 7th June.

Trinity term, until 1541, began some day between 27th May and 30th June, and ended some day between 17th June and 21st July. After 1541, it began five days and ended seven days earlier.

Michaelmas term, until 1641, began 9th or 10th October, and ended 28th or 29th November. After 1641, it began on 23rd or 24th October. After 1752, it began on 6th or 7th November.³

After these formal preliminaries, the names of the parties are stated. The real or pretended litigants are usually distinguished as "plaintiff" (querens) and "deforciant" (deforcians); but in the early Fines they are described as "demandant" (petens) and "tenant" (tenens). In some few instances the latter party is termed "impedient" (impediens). Where a wife was made a party, she was frequently not present in Court, having previously appointed her husband to act as her attorney; but the word "attorney" is seldom used in this class of records. Even when a wife was present, it is never stated that she was separately questioned as to her consent, as was the practice in manorial courts; yet it is said that such examination took place, though it was not material to the validity of the Fine.

Next follow the parcels, introduced by the single word de (concerning), setting forth in concise terms the land, tenement, rent, service, advowson, dower, marriage-settlement, debt, or whatever else may be the matter in dispute. Then the nature of the action, real or fictitious, is briefly mentioned. Generally in the early Fines it is said to be simply a "plea" (placitum), and this is not noticed in the abstract; but occasionally it is described as "a grand assize," "a recognition" or "an assize"

¹ The Fine was rather said "to levy" than "to be levied," but the passive form is now more commonly used.

² Thus Fine No. 29, Ric. I., is assigned to "3 Jan." in the Pipe Roll Series, vol. 20, p. 77, because "it is said to have been made 'in the Octave of St. John,' who is assumed to have been 'the Evangelist' (27th December); but more probably 'the Baptist' (24th June) is intended. It is moreover doubtful whether the octave, quinzaine, &c. of a feast should be referred to any particular day, as is here done; the first week, second week, &c., following, rather seem to be intended.

³ See Bond's Handy-Book for Verifying Dates. Easter and Trinity terms are regulated by the fall of Easter Day. Mr. Bond says that the commencement of Trinity term was affected by the establishment of Corpus Christi Day in 1264, but this does not appear to be the case, as the term had always begun on the tenth day after Trinity Sunday. Nicolas's Chronology states that Trinity term began on any day between 24th May and 27th June, and ended on any day between 8th June and 13th July; but this is erroneous. Bond in his text likewise states that Trinity term lasted only fifteen days (p. 175), but it really extended to twenty-two days until 1541, when it was reduced to twenty days. Each term nominally began on the Octave or eighth day of the feast from which it took its name, but the "full term" did not begin till "the fourth day" after the Octave. (Compare Tomlin, under the head of Terms.)

of mort d'ancestre, or of last presentation, or as "a plea of covenant," or "a plea of warranty of charter," &c. A "recognition" was a jury of recognitors, who were personally acquainted with the facts of the case, and whose verdict was to be obtained and recorded; it occurs only in the earlier records. The various kinds of actions are said to have been "summoned between" the parties, who, it is left to be inferred, had come to a settlement before the day of trial.

Then follow the covenants of the concord or agreement, which in the early Fines vary considerably. In many cases it is first of all stated that one party, known to lawyers as the "conusor," acknowledges the right of the other party, the "conusee," and this merely formal statement is mostly omitted in the text. The "conusance" clears the way for the actual conveyance of the whole or part of the premises, which in early Fines is made by either the demandant or the tenant; or else one party "remised and quitclaimed" to the other "all his right and claim" to the property. Sometimes there is a complicated arrangement of give-and-take between them, which is detailed at length.

The conveyances and quitclaims are usually made by one party, on behalf of "himself and his heirs," to the other party, "and to his heirs and assigns for ever;" but to avoid reiteration the words here quoted are omitted from the text, except in some few entries at the beginning. Where the grant was intended only for the life of the grantee, or for a term of years, the fact is duly noted.

In the case of conveyances, some service or rent was mostly reserved by the grantor, either a payment in money, or some nominal rent, such as a soar-sparrow hawk, a pair of gilt spurs, a pair of gloves, a pound of cummin, a rose, a gillyflower, &c.; it was payable to him by the grantee, a new sub-tenure being often thus created which had not previously existed; but the creation of new tenures was forbidden by the statute of Quia emptores in 18 Edw. I.

Professors Pollock and Maitland write thus on the subject:—"The terminology of Bracton's day and of yet earlier times neatly expresses the distinction between the service which the tenant owes to his immediate lord by reason of the bargain which exists between them, and the service which was incumbent on the tenement, whilst it was in the lord's hand. The former is intrinsic service, the latter forinsec service; the former is the service which is created by, which (as it were) arises within the bargain between the two persons, A and B, whose rights and duties we are discussing; the latter arises outside that bargain, is 'foreign' to that bargain; nothing that the bargainers do will shift it from the land, though as between themselves they can decide about its incidence."

But in translating the public records it is well recognised that we must always beware of adopting the terminology of legal treatises, ancient or modern. Here we have an instance in point. The term "intrinsic service" is never found in the Fines, and seldom if ever in other records; while "forinsec service" is an awkward substitute for the well known term "foreign service," which is the proper rendering of "forinsecum servitium."²

Instead of "intrinsic service" we find the rent reserved constantly described as "free service" in these records; and in this connexion it may be remarked that Fines are exclusively conveyances of manors and freeholds, as no Fine could pass between villains and bondmen, or customary tenants, whose lands afterwards became known as copyholds, though they and their lands might be comprised in conveyances made by their lords. Their presence at such conveyances is sometimes recorded.

The service or rent thus reserved is usually expressed to be the equivalent "for all service, saving foreign service." This means that the grantor had held his freehold under the King or other "chief lord of the fee," on condition of rendering certain services, which the grantee undertakes to render in future, in addition to the service or rent newly created. Sometimes, however, the grantor still undertakes to perform such services, or part of them. The term "foreign service" implies either that it was due to an external lord, or that it was to be performed outside the township in which the property was situate.

¹ History of English Laws, i., 216, 217.

In the same manner we meet with "foreign manor," "foreign wood" (see an early English instance of this in Fine No. 22, Ric. I.), "foreign plea," "foreign attachment," &c. "Foreigners" were inhabitants of cities and boroughs who were not freemen.

There were several kinds of "foreign service," the chief of which was military or knight service, or the payment of scutage in lieu thereof; and although this is sometimes called "royal service," it was not, except in the case of a Crown manor, rendered by the freeholder directly to the King, but to the lord of the manor, who held his land by military tenure, either of the King or of some great baron. Other kinds of "foreign service" were suit of the county court, suit of the hundred court, and suit of the manor court. The first two of these courts would be held at a greater or less distance from the freehold, and even as to the third, the freehold was in many cases situate in one township while the manor court was held in another.¹ Hence it is that "foreign service" does not always indicate military tenure; nor does it imply service out of the realm.

Any money-rent reserved was generally payable at two or four terms of the year, but in a few cases at six terms, sometimes in equal, sometimes in unequal portions. Other rents were payable at one certain time of the year. The four principal terms were Christmas, Easter (instead of Lady Day, as now), the Nativity of St. John the Baptist (Midsummer), and Michaelmas. The times of payment and the instalments payable are not given in the abstracts, as they would occupy much space, without affording any useful information.

If the party benefited paid any sum of money for the grant or quitclaim, the amount is stated in the last clause, and is shortly described in the abstract as "consideration," but this word is not actually used in the Fine. The money thus paid is sometimes described as "of the Easterlings," which is here contracted to "sterling."

The name of the county in which the premises were situate is stated in the lower margin of the Fine. If they were in more than one county, the names of all the counties are given, and the Fine is now arranged in the separate series known as "Divers Counties." In a number of early Fines the county is not stated at all, and thus there is a third comparatively small series of Fines described as "Unknown Counties," from which a few Fines have been selected as evidently belonging to Essex.

If any person "put in" his claim within the time limited, the fact is recorded on the dorse of the Fine in this manner—"A. B. apponit clamum suum."

Fines gradually ceased to afford the pleasing variety which characterised them in early times, and in the end came to be drawn up in one or two set forms. In the more modern Fines the imaginary precedent action is almost invariably described as "a plea of covenant"; the parcels are stated in exaggerated quantities, usually in round numbers; there is no positive grant of the premises, but merely a remise or quitclaim by the deforciant to the plaintiff; no rent or service is reserved to the remisor; no provision is made for performing royal or other services; and there are no reciprocal adjustments between the parties. The object of the Fine was no longer apparent within its four corners, and it became necessary to draw up a separate Deed "to declare its uses"; while Deeds in general, which had originally been as terse and as small as Fines, grew to such an outrageous extent in the last century that it is no uncommon thing to meet with one consisting of twenty skins of parchment, some being more than double that length. In this respect Deeds present a great contrast to the Fines, which remained brief and small to the last.

From the reign of Edward IV. downwards, Fines were intimately associated with another form of conveyance known as "Recoveries," which set forth the proceedings in feigned actions at ridiculous length, but which were equally obscure as to the real nature of the settlement, and each of them required a Deed "to lead its uses." Both Fines and Recoveries were abolished by statute in 1834.

The earliest Fine abstracted has been printed both by Mr. Hunter and by the Pipe Roll Society, the former reading the date as "xxv. . .," and the latter as "xxv[i]. . .," Henry II.; but Mr. Round has shown that it is enrolled on the Pipe Roll of 28 Henry II., where the date is clearly given as "xxviiij."²

² See English Historical Review, as before. The name "Selfeg" is given in the Pipe Roll as "Schefflega," or "Schelflega," the former spelling being doubtless erroneous.

25. Mich.* John, Prior of Holy Trinity of Canterbury, dem., by William le Curteis. Hugh de Nevill and Joan his wife, ten. Manors of Walewurth and Newton with appurts., and roos. of land with appurts. in Hallingebir'. Ten. quitclaimed the said manors to dem. and his church of Canterbury, from them and the heirs of Joan. Dem. quitclaimed to ten.² the said roos. of land in Hallingebir', and gave them 80 marks of silver.—Surrey. "Essex" is added in a hand of the 17th century.

27. Mich.* William de Averanches and Matilda his wife [and] John de Bovill and Hawisa his wife, dem. Robert de Ferrariis and Joan his wife, ten. Two parts of the manor of Brumton with appurts., which two parts dem. claimed against ten. as the reasonable portions of the same Matilda and Hawisa, which fell to them of the said manor. Ten. acknowledged the right of dem., who granted to ten. and the heirs in tail of Joan; to hold with the [other] third part of the manor of the King and his heirs by the service appertaining. If Joan or her children die without issue surviving, the manor shall revert to dem. and the heirs of Matilda and Hawisa; saving to the said Robert, if he survive Joan, a moiety of the manor, with the capital messuage and all other appurts., during all his life, so that he may not give, sell, pledge, or alienate. Ten. granted to dem. and the heirs of Matilda and Hawisa a third part of the manors of Elsenham and Weston, which ten. previously held.—Somerset, Essex, Bedford.

¹ It is very seldom that all three counterparts of a Fine are found together, as here. From these specimens it is clear that the word "Cirographum" was not only written between the sides of the counterparts given to the parties and the head of the counterpart retained by the Court, but also repeated between the heads of the two former, which, it is further to be remarked, were written head to head. Each counterpart was therefore properly called a "chirograph." Thus it will be seen that the sketch given in the second Report of the Deputy Keeper, App. I., 34, is incomplete, in respect of the early Fines, as it does not repeat the word "Cirographum" between the Indentures; and the remark holds good in respect of modern Fines, although the indentation and writing were considerably modified.

As all the three chirographs, in this instance, remained in Court, it may be inferred that the Fine was never completed by the parties. Moreover, as the name of the county is not given at the foot of any one of these three chirographs, it is to be supposed that such name was not usually filled in till the Fine was executed. This accounts for the rough and ready manner in which the names of the counties are usually written in the early Fines, they having been inserted at the last moment, probably when the fees, called the King's silver, were paid. Thus it would appear that the county-names were not accidentally omitted in the series arranged under the head of "Unknown Counties," but that these Fines were not in many instances really executed. The same remark will apply to many Fines in which the county name was originally omitted, but has been inserted in handwritings of the 17th century. This view is supported by the fact that many of such Fines are indented on one side as well as at the head, showing that they were intended for the parties, but never given out. It seems highly probable that the term "Foot of Fine" originated from the practice of adding the name of the county at the foot of the counterpart retained by the Court. The other two counterparts given out to the parties had no "foot"; hence the distinction.

² "And to the heirs of Joan" was first written, but altered, the name being partly cut out.

FEET OF FINES FOR ESSEX.

GENERAL INDEX.

FOREWORD.—In the preparation of this Index the conclusions of the Committee of the Congress of Archæological Societies have been generally adopted, with one exception. The prefix de (including combinations with the article) occurs in many English names, and sometimes coalesces with them to form a single word. In alphabetising this Index I have treated these prefixes, and perhaps some few others, as though they were always separated from the name, cross-references being added when required. Some few field-names have, more or less accidentally, been included in the list of names indexed.

Attention may be directed to the variety of Christian names current in the thirteenth century, that of 'Mary' being conspicuously rare. But of these and the field-names, something may be said on another occasion.

In conclusion it is my pleasant task to make an acknowledgment, however inadequate, of the unstinted help which has been given me in the work of revision and identification by our members, Dr. J. Horace Round and Mr. R. C. Fowler, to whom our Society is on this, as it has been on other occasions, much indebted.
